TOM and JERRY

THE MIDNIGHT GUEST

"Well, here I am!" announced Sammy Squirrel one day, as he popped into Wuff the Prairie Dog's snug little burrow. "I got your message and came as fast as I could."

"Swell!" grinned Wuff, glancing up from the desk where he sat busily scribbling on page after page of crisp white paper. "You're just in time to help me put the finishing touches on the book I'm writing for Charlie Coyote."

"Charlie Coyote!" repeated Sammy, turning pale all the way to the tips of his ears. "Wh-What kind of book are you writing for him?"

"A very interesting book, indeed," replied Wuff with a flourish of his quill pen. "It tells Charlie exactly how to go about catching squirrels and prairie dogs. You're just the one to help me write it."

"Have you gone out of your mind?" yelped Sammy in dismay, while Wuff pressed a second quill pen into his hand. "That will just make life twice as dangerous for us!"

"Oh, no, it won't!" countered Wuff with a merry twinkle. "You see, if we write the book, that means we'll know exactly what Charlie's going to do before he does it."

"And we can be prepared at all times," cried Sammy, warming to the idea at once. "Hey, boy, you're positively a genius."

"Not quite," demurred Wuff modestly. "After all, I do need your help."

Sammy now joined Wuff at the desk, and, in a very short while, they had written their "book." With great stealth and caution, they crept to Charlie's door and deposited the book in his mailbox. They then waited at what they hoped was a safe distance to see what would happen.

Sure enough, the gullible Charlie picked up the book. "Duh, gee. Look at the swell book somebody left me. Uh, I wonder what is inside. Well, well, looky here. 'How to Catch Squirrels and Prairie Dogs.' Oh, boy. This is just the info I need."

Charlie Coyote soon set forth to follow the book's directions for building what was described as a "prairie dog pitfall." Little did he suspect that Wuff and Sammy were gleefully tiptoeing along behind at a discreet distance to watch the fun.

All afternoon Charlie slaved away in the hot sun, digging a deep hole to catch his victims. Then, still following the book's directions, he went home to await results.

As soon as he was out of sight, Wuff and Sammy crept from concealment and burst into a merry jig. They were just whirling into the final steps, however, when FLOP! they tripped and fell right into the pit Charlie had dug.

"You and your smart ideas!" glowered Sammy as the two surprised little pals lay sprawled at the bottom of their own "prairie dog pitfall." "Now we really are trapped!"

"Not quite," replied Wuff, quickly collecting his wits after the initial shock. "Our instructions told Charlie to wait until sundown to check the trap," he explained, "and by then we can burrow our way to safety."

"That's true," breathed Sammy in relief, "but I kind of think we would have been smarter to stay home and not get involved in this whole business."

"You may be right at that," admitted Wuff, as they both set to work burrowing into the side of the pit. "We pitted our wits against Charlie Coyote and almost lost our skins! But you'll have to agree it'll be worth it when we get out," he added, bursting into a hearty chuckle. "Just think what fun it'll be to watch Charlie's face when he finds out his pitfall fell through!"
